Art Unit 1713

Applicants' election of species is acknowledged with appreciation. Applicants are correct in that the election of species referred to a "reactive donor" which is not recited in the claims or specification. This was in error and the Examiner had intended this to read "active filler." Applicants understood this to be active filler and identified the silica as being the species of reactive filler elected at this time.

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. § 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 55-108 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. § 103(a) as being unpatentable over Japanese Patent Abstract 07090123 or Varughese et al., the article titled "Chemical Attraction Between Epoxidized Natural Rubber and Silica: Studies on Cure Characteristics and Low Temperature Dynamic Mechanical Properties."

Each of these documents identifies epoxidized elastomers as a preferred ingredient and suggests to one of ordinary skill in the art that the silica can be used as a cross-linking agent within this elastomer. Applicants' process steps are seen to be conventional tire manufacturing processing steps and one of ordinary skill in the art would find it prima facie obvious to manufacture a tire following the conventionally incorporated processing steps given that one of ordinary skill in the art would have a reasonable expectation of success when utilizing the rubbers as shown in the prior art in tire manufacture.

It should be noted that claims 62-108 have no processing steps and the composition claims are rendered obvious from the compositions as identified within the prior art.

The species claims of 78 and 80 which do not read on the elected specie are rejected as well. The species identified within these claims are seen to be shown or rendered prima facie obvious from the species of the prior art.
